ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

This thesis was funded by an Early Stage Training Marie Curie Doctoral Fellowship and an Economic and Social Research Council Studentship. I am proud of, and thankful for, the generous financial support and the vote of confidence these awards entailed.

I learned immensely from my supervisors, Nicholas Wheeler and Marie Breen Smyth. I want to thank them for their advice, for sharing their knowledge with me and for always pushing me to think harder and write better. I also want to thank Michael C. Williams, my supervisor in the first two years of the project. His comments and advice were crucial.

My research benefited greatly from the excellent intellectual and material conditions provided by the Department of International Politics at Aberystwyth. I want to acknowledge the support of the administrative staff, in particular Donia Richards and Vicki Jones. I would also like to thank Gwenan Creunant for taking care of the bureaucratic questions pertaining to my funding.

Soumita Basu gave me many references and suggestions. I learned a lot from our conversations. Anja Gebel did some last-minute proof-reading – accompanied by insightful comments – for which I am very thankful. For their suggestions, comments, or words of encouragement, I thank Martin Alexander, Stuart Croft, Michael Foley, Jeroen Gunning, Gerry Hughes, Peter Jackson and James Vaughn. For being a source of inspiration and encouragement, a special ‘thank you’ goes to Ken Booth.

In order to see what a good thesis looks like, I consulted the PhD theses of Soumita Basu, Harmonie Toros and Huw Williams.¹

For being there, I want to thank my friends Andreja Zevnik, Angela Setterlund, Anja Gebel, Constantino Xavier, Ed Frettingham, Emily Trahair, Jen Pedersen, Liliana Sousa, Marjaana Jauhola, Miguel Esménio, Mirva Salminen, Mónica Fragoso, Ontibile Dingert, Patrick Carlin, Soumita Basu, Susanna Karlsson, Tania Castellano, Tong Jiao, and Tuomi-Tuulia Ervasti.

To my Father, my Mother, to José Miguel and to Raquel.
